* Synopsis *

In the Prologue, we meet Tevye, the milkman, and his wife, Golde, and the people of Anatevka, a small Jewish settlement in Russia. It is 1905 and the first rumblings of the Russian Revolution are to be heard. Life in Anatevka is hard, and governed by the traditions of the Jewish way of life, with marriages arranged by the village matchmaker, Yente. She has been to see Golde, to arrange a marriage for Tzeitel, the oldest daughter, with the rich but elderly, Lazar Wolf, the village butcher. Tzeitel, Hodel, and Chava, the three sisters sing of the matches they would like to be arranged for their perfect husbands.

Tevye then enters, pulling his cart, and muses "If I was a rich man", but his dreams are interrupted by various people, and the news that Jews from adjacent villages are being evicted. Enter Perchik, a student from Kiev University, wandering, but earning a living from giving lessons to children; Tevye invites him to spend the Sabbath with them, and he is soon involved with Hodel, Tevye's second daughter. After some confusion, Tevye and Lazar Wolf agree to Tzeitel's betrothal, but when Tevye tells Tzeitel the good news she is overcome and has to reveal that all along, she has loved Motel the tailor. She is so upset that Tevye agrees (after persuasion) that she may marry him and not Lazar Wolf; this then has to be explained to Golde.

This is cleverly done by the appearances, in a dream, of Lazar's deceased first wife, Fruma-Sarah, who tells off dire consequences of Lazar remarrying. Golde agrees to the marriage of Tzeitel and Motel. The marriage is celebrated, but after a joyous dance, the Constable enters with his men and breaks up the ceremony as a prelude to a pogrom.

Act Two opens with Perchik on his way back to Kiev to take part in the revolution but, before he goes, he asks Hodel to marry him. They tell Tevye that they will marry, in defiance of the tradition, and despite his opposition, he agrees. He bravely tells Golde of his decision and why he did it—because Hodel loves Perchik—and asks if she loves him and this leads to the loveliest duet in the show—"Do you love me?"

The rumors start about Hodel and Perchik (who has been arrested in Kiev) followed by a new arrival in Motel's shop, where Chava, the third daughter, has once again been approached by Fyedka, a Russian. Fyedka has been interested in Chava for some time but she has held off due to Tevye's traditional Jewish hatred of all things Russian, which would never allow him to accept Fyedka as his son-in-law. Now she realizes that she loves him, and tries to ask Tevye to accept Fyedka but he cannot and tells her never to see him again. She decides instead to run away with him.

On top of this disaster, the Constable warns Tevye that the whole village has three days to clear out—the pogrom—has started. There is talk of resistance but it is hopeless and Anatevka has to be abandoned.

The show ends with the villagers, one after the other, going away to start a new life wherever they can. Tevye, Golde, and their two youngest daughters, Shprintze and Bielke, are packed and ready to go to America, leaving Anatevka empty, deserted, silent.

Congratulations
PJ & Lizzy!

We love you!

A graduate of Florida State University, he has performed all over the country in regional theaters such as Paper Mill Playhouse, North Shore Music Theater, and Pittsburgh CLO as well as the national tours of Evita and South Pacific, starring the late Robert Goulet. Some of his favorite performing experiences include: Children of Eden at Paper Mill where he is featured on the original cast recording, South Pacific at Carnegie Hall Starring Reba McEntire, Brian Stokes Mitchell, and Alec Baldwin, and the Broadway workshop of Harmony, a new musical by Barry Manilow. Recently he has started teaching young performers in LA and most recently at Paper Mill Playhouse's theater school and is thrilled to be using his training and professional stage experience to bring theatre arts to the young people of our society.
